UM PHILOSOPHY COURSE OFFERED IN EVENINGS

MISSOULA--

"The Crisis of Democracy: Past Perspectives and Future Prospects" will be offered at the University of Montana on Thursdays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. beginning Oct. 2. Six philosophy professors will teach the course using readings, lectures and discussion.

Questions this course will address include: What is the nature of the American democratic understanding of man? Is our society still governable from the basis of an 18th-century conception of man and institutions? How has the growth of capitalism, population, bureaucracy and technology affected our understanding of democratic man and his prospects for self-government, freedom, justice and happiness?

The course, Philosophy 195, has no prerequisites and may be taken for two credits. It is open for extension and regular University enrollment. For more information, contact the philosophy department office at 243-2171.
